There are growing expectations and increasing pressure to disaggregate data by disability in program monitoring and reporting. For many working in development and humanitarian action, this remains challenging. Here at the Nossal Institute we are keen to help smooth the way by hosting a disability data drop-in clinic. Experts from the Nossal Institute's Disability Inclusion for Health and Development team will be available to answer your disability data questions, perhaps debunk a few myths, and provide some useful pointers.

The clinic is part of an Australian Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade funded research project into the use of the Washington Group Questions on Disability in Development and Humanitarian Programming implemented under the CBM-Nossal Partnership for Disability-inclusive Development.
